Transcript

Aditya: Good morning, everyone. Let's start the weekly review for the meeting intelligence project.
Shruti: Good morning. I have the latest notes from the previous meeting open in front of me.
Varun: Morning, team. I checked the model outputs from last night before joining.
Neha: Good morning. I also reviewed the transcript quality from the audio test cases.

Aditya: First, I want to quickly recap where we are.
Aditya: We completed the base text pipeline, the enhanced model, and the hybrid model with gold labels.
Aditya: Today we need to review dataset quality, the speaker diarization issue, deployment readiness, and paper direction.
Shruti: That sounds good. I think we should also discuss whether the current outputs are presentation-ready.
Varun: Yes, especially the blocker detection part, because that still looks inconsistent in some examples.
Neha: I agree. Also, some of the meeting minute outputs sound a bit too robotic.

Aditya: Let's begin with the dataset.
Aditya: Shruti, can you walk us through the cleaned review sheet status?
Shruti: Sure. I downloaded the human review sheet and filled a good portion of the human_label column.
Shruti: Most of the rows were straightforward, especially questions and clear action items.
Shruti: The harder part was separating decisions from general discussion.
Varun: That makes sense, because some sentences sound like agreement but are not final decisions.
Neha: Did you notice any pattern in the confusing rows?
Shruti: Yes. Short statements like "that works" or "we can do that" are often ambiguous without surrounding context.
A note: That is incorrect. We need a context window before.
